Reich makes several scathing claims about the changes in the job market in our society over the last 20 years in an article that seems to be an indictment of the U.S. Government and corporate America. He classifies the sectors of employment most affected by the global changes as “boats,” which are: the routine producers (boat 1), in-person servers (boat 2), and the symbolic-analyst (boat 3). Explain the type of work represented by each sector (boat), what employment conditions are like (labor, earnings, or other), and what effect the global economy is having on people working in each sector.
