Evaluating Online Sources: “The Conference Board”

B. Click on the “home link”, then click on the “about us” link.
C. Answer these questions:
   a. What is the source for the information? Is it from a source that identifies itself and is accountable for its information?
   b. Who is the author? Does the author seem qualified to write on the topic, why or why not?
   c. How current is the information? How does the currency of the information matter or not?
   d. Overall, on a scale of 1-10, how reliable does this information seem—with 10 being very reliable and 1 not very reliable at all?

Evaluating Online Sources: “Students Review”

B. Answer these questions:
   a. What is the source for the information? Is it from a source that identifies itself and is accountable for its information?
   b. Who is the author? Does the author seem qualified to write on the topic, why or why not?
   c. How current is the information? How does the currency of the information matter or not?
   d. Overall, on a scale of 1-10, how reliable does this information seem—with 10 being very reliable and 1 not very reliable at all?